President’s Letter:

Ron Arons regaled us on February 1 with his “Mapping Madness” presentation on how to use Internet-based on-line mapping techniques to find anyone, anywhere, anyhow. Ron’s handout of resources is on our website www.jgscv.org under meetings. Click on prior meetings. See page 6 for a short list of local venues with maps. Ron is a great teacher and we learned, while laughing, at some of his examples including his waving at a Google truck taking photos on the corner on which he was standing. Ron tied some of the maps to infamous Jewish criminals—of course—especially Bernie Madoff. Ron has published a new book on criminals—not just Jewish criminal records, “WANTED! U.S. Criminal Records Source and Research Methodology. Many of us are finding we have some of these “interesting” ancestors on our family trees and may wish to find out how to look-up their records. JGSCV purchased the book and it is in our Traveling Library in Category C.

JGSCV Board member Warren Blatt facilitated our Schmoozing Corner, where you can discuss your latest genealogical find or problem. Remember to come to the meetings 15 minutes in advance to take advantage of this new feature!

Carole Webber gave the book report on a four book series of historical fiction by Maisie Mosco. The stories are of a Jewish family who escapes from Russia to England and how they survive two world wars, anti-semitism and prosper. Judith Cohen will report in March on The Jewish Quarter of Philadelphia by Harry Boonin (a book from our traveling library) the city where her family lived. If you are a 2010 dues-paid member, you may be able to borrow certain of our traveling library books (which is otherwise non-circulating) for the book report- a new benefit of membership. If you would like to participate in our new book review program please contact me at president@jgscv.org for more information. Non-members may also participate by reporting on their own or a public library genealogically-relevant book. All books selected for the book review need to be prior approved.

Recently, I presented an adaptation of “How to Begin Your Genealogy” (from our Jan. meeting) to the 6th grade class at Temple Adat Elohim. I used their teacher’s family as the examples for census, ships manifest, Googling one self etc. The children were very engaged in looking up their family names in our Beider and Menk books. It is never too early to get your children, grandchildren, nieces and nephews and other family members interested in their genealogy!

We return to our Sunday afternoon meeting time with our March 7th meeting. Our speaker is Steve Luxenberg, associate editor at The Washington Post, who has worked for 35 years as a newspaper editor and reporter. He will talk on his journey to find out about why his mother kept her sister’s existence from him, which led him to write “Annie’s Ghost”. Steve will show how he used genealogical techniques to piece together the story of his mother's secrets, his aunt's unknown life, and the times in which they lived. Steve's research took him to imperial Russia and Depression-era Detroit, through the Holocaust in the Ukraine and the Philippine war zone, and back to the mental hospitals where Annie and many others languished in anonymity. You will have the opportunity to purchase Steve’s book for $20.00 cash or check only—this is a 20% discounted price from the regular retail price.

COLLECTIONS OF JEWISH CULTURE
Ten institutions across Europe have joined forces to provide online access to their Jewish culture collections. The joint project, called "Judaica Europeana," is part of an effort to digitize many of Europe's cultural resources. The European Commission provided a major grant for Judaica Europeana. "Genealogy From the Inside Out"
The Story of Annie’s Ghosts

Annie’s Ghosts...is “a great non-fiction read for genealogists” —Jan Alpert, president, National Genealogical Society, in the society’s July ’09 newsletter

“My mother was an only child. That’s what she told everyone, sometimes within minutes of meeting them. When I heard that my mother had been hiding the existence of a sister, I was bewildered. A sister? I was certain that she had no siblings”. Part memoir, part detective story, part history, Annie’s Ghosts revolves around three main characters (the author’s mom, her sister and the author, narrator/detective/son), several important secondary ones (including several relatives whom he found in the course of reporting on the book), as well as Eloise, the vast county mental hospital where Steve’s secret aunt was confined—despite her initial protestations—all of her adult life. Steve will show how he used genealogical techniques to piece together the story of his mother’s secrets, his aunt’s unknown life, and the times in which they lived. Steve’s research took him to imperial Russia and Depression-era Detroit, through the Holocaust in Ukraine and the Philippine war zone, and back to the hospitals where Annie and many others languished in anonymity.

Speaker: Steve Luxenberg, an associate editor at The Washington Post, has worked for 35 years as a newspaper editor and reporter. Steve’s career began at The Baltimore Sun, where he worked for 11 years before joining The Post in 1985. He has headed The Post’s investigative staff, succeeding Bob Woodward, and directed The Post’s Sunday commentary section. Reporters working for Steve have won numerous awards, including two Pulitzer Prizes.

There will be an opportunity to purchase the book at the meeting-checks or cash only. See the review by JGSCV and JGSLA member Marion Werle on the next page.

Meeting co-sponsored with Temple Adat Elohim. There is no charge to attend the meeting. Anyone may join JGSCV.

Imagine finding out that your mother, who made a point of telling people that she was an only child, actually had a sister. That is exactly what happened to Steve Luxenberg, a Senior Editor for the Washington Post. A few years before his ailing mother died, the author’s sister got a call from her mother’s social worker, saying that the mother had mentioned having a disabled sister who was institutionalized as a young child. After his mother's death, the family received forwarded mail from a local cemetery offering to plant flowers at three gravesites — those of the author’s maternal grandparents, Tillie and Hyman Cohen and an unknown “Annie Cohen”. Thus began the author’s investigation into the life of his missing aunt, a personal quest that is at once a search for understanding, an adventure in genealogical research, a history of attitudes toward disability and mental illness, an evolving history of how society has dealt with mental and physical disabilities, a history of a Jewish family, a history of Detroit, and a debate about the privacy of personal records, even though the subject has long since died. The author is a journalist by profession, and he wears two hats throughout the book: a son trying to uncover a story and understand his mother’s motivation for keeping such a secret, and an investigative reporter, managing somehow to control his emotions while researching a subject very close to his heart.

I first read about Annie’s Ghosts in the most recent edition of Upfront with NGS, the online newsletter of the National Genealogical Society. I immediately downloaded a copy from Amazon.com and became engrossed in the fascinating story of how the author unearthed his family secret — his mother actually had a physically and mentally disabled sister who was institutionalized just before she turned 21 (not as a child, as she had told the social worker) and lived out the remainder of her life in various institutions, chiefly Eloise Hospital, a public mental hospital located outside of Detroit.

The author was a complete novice to genealogy. Typical of many of the immigrant generation, the older generations of his family “seemed to have a collective amnesia about anything sad, tragic, or pre-American”. His maternal grandparents were “Polish or Russian Jews” and his paternal grandparents were from “somewhere in what is now northeastern Poland, and all of them, from both sides, had arrived before 1920.”

In addition to tracking down living relatives including one cousin of his mother, who was a Holocaust survivor, he also attempted to find friends of his mother from the old neighborhood where she grew up, people who might have known of the missing sister. I didn’t realize until the acknowledgments at the end, that this project was conceived as a book, and as such, the author had access to many experts that the novice genealogist doesn’t have, except through books and lectures. Among others, the author credits Marian Smith, who “guided me in obtaining records that I had no idea existed” and Loretto Dennis Szucs of ancestry.com who “shared names from her Rolodex as well as her extensive knowledge of how to find family records”.

The narrative is very compelling throughout, although it falters a bit towards the end (at one point he segues into an investigation of his father’s military service and discovers a secret which is not really germane to the overall story). Each chapter begins with a photo, followed by personal memories of the author, printed in italics. The remainder of each chapter continues with the results of his unfolding quest, interspersed with historical interludes to put the material in context. A good deal of time is spent describing the legal morass he encountered while trying to uncover his aunt’s medical history, and running into laws restricting access to medical records, ostensibly due to privacy issues, even though the subject died in 1972. The author interviewed a number of medical and mental health professionals, including a former psychiatrist at the institution where his aunt lived for so many years, to determine how patients were treated and to help decipher the medical records he was ultimately able to obtain.

In the end, he found answers, but like everybody who embarks on a journey into family history, the answers were not complete, and many conclusions are speculative. After exploring the background and social world of his poor immigrant grandparents, he conjectures that they had few options and simply followed the advice of the medical experts of their time. He never did find out why his mother kept her secret throughout her entire life, although he uncovered some possibilities. Like all of us, he found that some records had been destroyed, and simply weren’t available, so he never determined precisely what was wrong with his aunt, other than that she was both physically and mentally disabled. As to whether she was truly “insane”, it is impossible to determine either the nature or severity of her mental illness. What is certain is that attitudes towards disability and mental illness have changed dramatically since 1940, and that Annie Cohen most likely would not have been institutionalized for the rest of her life had she been born in contemporary times.

The author has a website and a blog at http://www.steveluxenberg.com, which includes a photo of the headstone that the author and his siblings purchased for their aunt’s previously anonymous grave. Steve Luxenberg’s book has given Annie the recognition that she never received during her tragic lifetime, even from her own family.

THE SCHMOOZING CORNER was led by JGSCV Board Member Warren Blatt who fielded genealogy questions from JGSCV members. Remember, you can find The Schmoozing Corner on the right as you enter the meeting room at Temple Adat Elohim; near the front of the room. There will be a knowledgeable JGSCV member available to help with your own specific research issues. The Schmoozing Corner is open for 15 minutes immediately prior to the start of the meeting. Look for the sign. Debra Kay Blatt, JGSCV Board Member will facilitate the March 7 Schmoozing Corner.

The long-awaited US version of the Great Britain series on family history-focused series will premiere on NBC (locally channel 4) March 5 at 8:00 p.m. (Pacific Standard Time). The series will run for 8 weeks-through April 30th. The series will lead seven celebrities on a heart-warming journey back in time as they discover more about the ancestors who came before them. Lisa Kudrow, who executive produced the show will be featured in the episodes, along with Sarah Jessica Parker, Spike Lee, Matthew Broderick, Susan Sarandon, Emmitt Smith, and Brooke Shields. Ancestry.com is a partner with NBC on this show.

The idea for “Who Do You Think You Are?” originated from a show that has been phenomenally successful in the UK for several years. Since the show aired in 2004, the UK has seen a surge of interest in family history, and the same reaction is expected from “Who Do You Think You Are?” in the United States. There are versions also showing in Australia, Canada and Israel. For more information on the show see: http://tinyurl.com/cfp55h

There are other US television shows focusing on genealogy-themed television programs indicating that 2010 may be as popular as 1976 when “Roots” was first shown. In addition to Who Do You Think You Are there are:

Faces of America on PBS (see your local listing for your PBS channel) with Henry Louis Gates, Jr. premiered Wednesday, February 10, 9 p.m. PST, and explores the family histories of 12 renowned Americans. If you missed it, you can see the second episode here: http://tinyurl.com/ydzlxtc

Find My Family (ABC)- 2010 schedule to be determined as of press time, will focus on family reunions.

The Generations Project (Brigham Young University Television) http://tinyurl.com/y9sgtrj Monday nights at 8PM MST, helps those who have questions about their family history investigate their own identities by walking in the shoes of their ancestors.

MORE ABOUT MAPS

Ron Arons presentation focused on Internet sites to find maps. There are also local resources for accessing maps:

California State University at Northridge Library has an extensive map collection including Sanborn maps http://library.csun.edu/

The Los Angeles Public Library- has Sanborn Maps http://www.lapl.org/catalog/

Ventura County Library System has Sanborn maps and many others http://www.vencolibrary.org/

County of Los Angeles Public Library has Sanborn maps for LA 1888-1900 and other types of maps http://www.colapublib.org/

UCLA has extensive map collection http://catalog.library.ucla.edu/

* Sanborn maps were originally created for assessing fire insurance liability in urbanized areas in the United States. The maps include detailed information regarding town and building information in approximately 12,000 U.S. towns and cities from 1867 to 1970. They are a highly useful resource for historical research, planning, preservation, genealogical research, sociological studies and research of urban geography.
1939 United Kingdom National Registration is Available

The 1939 UK National Registration is a genealogical valuable resource for those who had ancestors living in England and Wales on September 29, 1939. The National Health Service Information Center (NHS IC) is providing this information. The national registration was required by Parliament as an emergency measure at the beginning of World War II. This was the beginning of the requirement of identity cards that everyone was required to have. The registration number was assigned after the following information was collected on everyone in the household: names, sex, age, occupation, profession, residence, marriage status, membership in the military or civil defense.

For information on how to apply for the registration and more information go to: http://tinyurl.com/ydhsy67

The charge for searching for the information--regardless if it is found or not - is £42. No refunds will be given once the search is started. This information was previously not available. Data will only be released for those individuals who are deceased and recorded as deceased. According to the website providing a death certificate may not be sufficient evidence. Because the entries are over 70 years, some of the entries may not be complete, legible, or illegible due to natural deterioration.

Great Britain has a 100 year rule before releasing census information, and the last UK census released is 1911 (for England, Wales and Northern Ireland which released it 2009 a bit ahead of the 100 years-- Scotland- will not be released until 2011). Therefore, the registration information may be the most recent information available on those living in the UK.

Scotland
The National Registration register has been kept secret because the 1939 Act prohibited publication of the information but thanks to an application under the Freedom of Information (Scotland) Act 2002 that restriction has been reviewed and details about people who have since died are now being made available. The fee is £13 and evidence of the death of the person who is the subject of the enquiry. For information on where to send the inquiry go to: http://tinyurl.com/yc3hpjs

Northern Ireland
Currently it is not clear how access will be managed for the Northern Ireland part of the National Register as the Public Record Office of Northern Ireland (PRONI) recently admitted that the collection, which comprises many hundreds of volumes, "is extremely large, is completely uncatalogued and is stored in our offsite storage facility.

Laurence Harris, Immediate Past Chairman - JGS Great Britain and professional genealogist provided the source for the information.
